The purpose of the American Institute of Graphic Arts is to further excellence in communication design as a broadly defined discipline, strategic tool for business and cultural force. The AIGA is the place design professionals turn to first to exchange ideas and information, participate in critical analysis and research, and advance education and ethical practice.

Founded in 1997, the Austin AIGA chapter promotes the design profession through lectures, exhibitions, professional seminars, educational activities, and projects in the public interest. AIGA members are involved in the design and production of books and periodicals, typefaces, corporate, environmental and promotional graphics, packaging, branding strategy, websites, interface and new media design. Through the national office and local chapters, AIGA members form an effective network that is a resource to the profession and the public.

All day you're at the whim of some philistine who could never appreciate your genius. Never! Never! But at night, ah! That's different. Only under the shelter of darkened skies, and the shrill white light of a bare 100 watt bulb can you create—unfettered by the shackles and constraints of Joe Six-pack and his bourgeois tastes. Only then can your creative spirit rise to take its place in the Pantheon of artists ... Picasso, Cezanne, Rothko, (insert your name here).*

Show the world your genius. Next month we will be accepting submissions for the first AIGA Austin After Hours Exhibition. The show is open to any creative work that you do outside of your day job. Whether it's photography, painting, drawing, sculpture or interpretive dance, we don't care, just haul it on down to Gallery Lombardi and share your true genius with your friends. Cocktails and conversation will abound.
